ARCHIVES FOR THE HISTORY OF QUANTUM PHYSICS

Preamble

The Archives for the History of Quantum Physics (AHQP) was assembled under the direction of the Joint Committee of the American Physical Society and the American Philosophical Society on the History of Theoretical Physics in the Twentieth Century. The AHQP is deposited, in original or duplicate form, at the Library of American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at the Library of the University of California, Berkeley, California, and at the Universitets Institut for Teoretisk Fysik (now Niels Bohr Institutet), Copenhagen, Denmark and others. The Joint Committee during its existence, or later its parent societies, may authorize the deposit of a duplicate archive at additional Libraries of Deposit with the intention of increasing the utility of the collection to the world of scholarship. In all cases use of the AHQP is governed by the following Convention required by the nature of the assurances given by the Joint Committee to the donors of the material, without which assurances the material could often not have been obtained. Use of a few items in the AHQP is further restricted to meet the wishes of individual donors.

Convention Regarding the Use of the Archives for the History of Quantum Physics

(1) The institutions at which a copy of the AHQP will be deposited undertake to make sure that access will only be granted to bona fide scholars and students working under their supervision.

(2) Anyone to be given access must agree, by signing a printed statement of conditions, that, though he or she may site the collection, he or she may not quote from it without the permission of the proprietors of the literary rights in the material to be quoted and that he or she will paraphrase it only in such detail as is essential to a just expression of its historical and scientific substance.

(3) At their discretion, the persons responsible for the safekeeping of the Archive may allow additional copies of small numbers of items in the collections to be made copies, to observe the conditions set forth in paragraph (2) above, and who will further agree not to allow such copies to pass out of their hands.

Declaration

In consideration of the extension to me by the Librarian of the privilege of using, for scholarly purposes, archival materials assembled under the direction of the Joint Committee of the American Physical Society and the American Philosophical Society on the History of Theoretical Physics in the Twentieth Century, I agree that I shall not quote from any of the material to which I am given access without the permission of the proprietor of literary rights in it and I recognize that, should I wish to so quote, it is my obligation to obtain such permission from the proprietor of those rights, and that I shall paraphrase it only in such detail as is essential to a just expression of its historical and scientific substance, and that if I am allowed to copy or to have copies made of any of the material, by microfilm or other techniques (including hand copying), I shall use the copies only for scholarly purpose, subject to the foregoing restrictions, and shall not allow them to pass into the hands of others without the written consent of the Librarian. I also agree to send a copy of any resulting publications to the following depository.
